Are you a beach or mountain person? Explain your choice.

I love beaches too, but I would definitely say I am more of a mountain person. I have been a member of a mountaineering club since college and back then, we would climb mountains almost every weekends not just for fun and leisure but also for other purposes such as charity missions and tree planting. I love the feeling when you reach the peak of a mountain and see the view from the up there. It is very overwhelming and it humbles you as a person. You will forget all the pain and struggles you experienced while climbing up the mountain. It also represents our lives. All these struggles and hardships are just temporary and we need to experience these in order to reach the top and appreciate our successes.

What is your greatest struggle in this pandemic and how are you overcoming it?

The greatest struggle I've had these past few months would be when the pandemic started last March, I was torned between keeping my previous job and staying home with my family. During the ECQ period when transportation was limited, my previous company did not offer a work from home option. The employees were in-housed for a month and I could not afford to stay away from my family that long. So I decided to quit and the real struggle began when bills were piling up and it's only my husband who was still earning for the family. So I decided to look for homebased jobs and thankfully, I found one. But being a people person that I am, I also missed working outside with other people and working full time at home is not really good for my mental health. That's why I decided to look for a another job and I ended up applying here at Pathcutters.
