Do you consider yourself lucky?

Lucky? Actually, I do not believe in luck. If you rephrased the question & asked if I consider myself blessed then, yes, I consider myself blessed.

I consider blessings, not in material things nor in riches but, rather in the little things I receive each day. The Lord waking me up to a new morning is already a blessing. The Lord giving good health to my family & friends is already a blessing. The Lord loving me, even if I do not deserve to be loved, is already a blessing in it itself.

I do not need a car, money or wealth, in order to consider myself blessed. I am already blessed because of the presence & love of my God, as well as the love of my family & friends.

Between your dad and mom, who are you closest to and what is the biggest lesson you've learned from him or her?

To be honest, I am a self proclaimed "mama's boy". It may be embarrassing to admit for some but, I do not really care or mind of the opinion of others on this matter.

No offense to my father but, I love my mother more. Even if I say it or not, he obviously knows & feels it that way too. All of us kids love Mama more than we love Papa.

Mama is my confidante especially, on things that are important & personal. Mama would give me sound advices & always looking out for my well being. She would not judge me, no matter what I would say. She would listen to me intently, before ever reacting. She would keep on reminding me to always bring my health protocol things, every time I go out of the house. She would always tell me to pray , every time she feels that I am troubled or encounter any problems. She would even ask me how am I doing, even if I haven't told her anything yet.

So for me, the biggest lesson I've learned from her is forgiveness. No matter how much family or friend have hurt you in the past, there is no need to carry it over to the present. Forgiveness is not for them anyway, it is for you. If you forgive someone who has wronged you in the past, then the Lord will appreciate & love you more for that.
