You're a new addition to the crayon box. What color would you be and why?

As a new addition to the crayon box, I would be the color combination of blue like the ocean and green like the color of grass. A gradient of blue and green that shows both of these elements. Blue symbolizes peace and serenity while green shows calmness and growth. Nature has so many colors that our eyes perceive and these two are the most prominent for me. Not only does it portray elements but these colors also show and depict emotions. I chose this color to radiate both the peace coming from the sea and the calm from the grasslands when I see them. It is also the same aura I want others to see and feel when they are with me, that they can be at peace and be at ease when they are around me. Due to the pandemic, a lot of people are now troubled and worried, so having a sense of peace and calm is always a welcome thought to those that struggle to find them and I wanted this color to serve that purpose in any art and material where it is used.

What's the greatest advice that you didn't take?

The greatest advice I did not take was to invest early on things that will last a lifetime. This advice was given by my uncle that worked in retail. He was always pointing out that a lot of the things we truly need may seem temporary and that we have a lot of time to get there, but this is not always true. I found out that the mindset of prolonging to invest on things that last a lifetime such as insurances, appliances, a house and a car, does not need to wait until we reach a certain age. We can start to invest early and enjoy these things early as well. I did find that these things were too big of an investment for me and that it can wait when I was still young. Now, I learned that these may look like big investments but I can always start small. Saving a small portion of earnings will always result to achieving this goal. Taking small steps to reach the finish line is always the goal.
