Do you consider yourself lucky?

Being lucky is subjective. Some people would have all the fine things in life but still feel unlucky. Others would have the minimal things in life but still consider themselves lucky.

Personally, I feel so lucky. I may not have the wealth and power that the richest people possess but I have my greatest treasures - my family and friends. With them I can feel the ease and contentment in life. Every laughter I had with them is priceless that no Ferrari or any luxury can overcome it. I admit that there are times when I feel down because of all the bad days and I would think that I am unlucky and I would compare myself to others. But every time I open up to my family and friends, I feel relieved and I thank God that I have them. They make me feel I'm worthy, I'm loved, I'm important, and I'm deserving. With them, what could I ask for?

There will always be bad days but I know, they are always there for me too. It has been tested through time and what I am now can attest to that. Indeed, I am lucky.

Between your dad and mom, who are you closest to and what is the biggest lesson you've learned from him or her?

As a child from a small family, I grew up being close to my parents and sibling. But between my dad and mom, I can say that I am closer to my mom. Everyday, we share lots of moments together especially she's always at home while my dad is working. And being with her, I have learned a lot of things. All the house chores I know are basically the skills I got from her. From cooking to cleaning the house and more. Also, my mom is the one who unleashes the fire and desire within me. I have learned from her to be strong and to stand up for myself. She taught me how to be independent and courageous. She taught me how to be proud of myself without stepping down on others. Above all, she taught me how to be a good person. All that I have become now is because of her.
