What have you learned during the pandemic?

Seeing myself, my family and loved ones alive is the greatest blessing that I am thankful of this pandemic. Proper hygiene and keeping you and your family healthy is what keeps us going in these trying times. Also with the help of the prayer and owe everything to him to keep us safe and hope that this pandemic will end and will continue to guide all medical personnels and everyone battling in every corner of the world. Pandemic has taken many lives of many people around the world. May it be poor or rich, famous or not. There are no exceptions. It really has a great impact on the global and international market in terms of economy. Many people have lost their jobs. Money is important but keeping safe and alive is what really matters. For me, earning a lot of money for now is not that important as long as I have enough income just to sustain the needs for my family. Faith, hope and helping each other to stand up and keep going is one thing I learned.

Fear is what holds us back from discovering our inner self and our potentials. My greatest fear is losing my loved ones. They are my strength in these trying times. I grew up having a good support system. They never discouraged me and always got my back in every path and decisions I take. When I was a kid I always adore and grateful how my parents struggles doing hard labour just to fill in our stomachs. They are what keeps me going and what makes me want to be successful so I could repay their hardwork. They said, it's our parents responsibility to mold us to be a better person, but it's our responsibility to take care of them and repay their love and warmth in raising us to be a better person in this society. They are my strength and also my weakness. Losing them means losing a part of me. However, death is irreversible so we have to accept the fact that there are no permanent in this world. Acceptance of our greatest fears and move forward with our life but keeping them in our hearts forever.
