

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Life, as we know it, doesn't always come with butterflies and rainbows but with storms and mites ready to dismantle things apart. Ever since a certain member of my family dies at the hands of ruthless men, I had this insatiable thirst for revenge. All that I can remember is that violence is paid for with violence. I always wanted to be a lawyer. I always wanted to defend our rights from people who take advantage of us. I wanted to send all of my family's fear of disputes to court and to have legal procedures. I realize that we've been degraded of our rights as human beings and we deserve happiness and safety. Hopefully, in a few years, may God give me the courage to pursue such a dream that might change fate of our family. I always wanted to be a lawyer and, in a few years, I'll claim it.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

I think the most stressful part of being a student is time and resource management. Back when we were in college, I used to complain about my group's inability to share thoughts and ideas in doing our research. I used to do the task on my own with my own money because I could not rely on my groupmates. I used to have burnout and panic attacks only to reach deadlines. I encourage my groupmates to listen to me when I am discussing the plans, I've made to ensure the effectiveness of communication. I assigned tasks that will deliberately smoothen the flow of our project. During our last day on the Research Subject, we actually had the highest scores out of 8 sections and that wouldn't have been possible without the cooperation of my groupmates. To this day, I still remember how we crammed only to finish one task but luckily, we survived.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

I think being a campus journalist and a student leader is way too hard for a typical student. But for me, it was a great experience back in college. I used to be stuck between protecting my credibility as a campus journalist and a student leader or roasting someone for being such a hard man for people like me. I used to enjoy the break times and travels with my team. We used to travel around places we'd never been to for team-building exercises. I somehow struggle to make friends with the newbies or the seniors, not only that they are so intimidating but their capabilities exceed mine. I enjoyed the late-night walk and talks and the hangouts. Even at the most stressful times, we still manage to keep smiling even if there are deadlines to catch. If time could be reversed, I would definitely revisit those memories over and over again.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

They told me that I was so intimidating and unfriendly because of how I dressed. They often scold me for being so introverted most of the time. time. But as time went by, we managed to be comfortable with each other's company. We used to hang out all day when we didn't have something else to do. Over time, the sense of intimidation they saw in me, now turned out to be the weirdest impression of being socially awkward. I was described as an introverted kind of person and their impression of me is now gone as time went by. Those are their impressions of me for as long as I can remember. Being in college leaves you a lot of impressions on people before they know your name and that's great. No matter what they call us, the memories of them calling you for the first time will definitely leave a smile on their faces.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

I am most proud of finishing college with the help of my mother. It is a well-deserved victory that will change the course of my life. My family has always been there to support me emotionally, mentally, and spiritually. It is a humble experience to finally say that you've survived the hardest part of life and that it wouldn't be possible without my family. Life has been pretty hard on my family through these years, but that darkness ends soon as I've reached the light. Like a light bearer amidst the darkness. The one to finally show the path of righteousness and pride. I claim these all with humility and honor. Now that life is starting to hit me, I'll use all that I've learned to give back everything my family sacrificed. For my father, who left right before I could make him proud. This is all for you, Dad.
