

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

When I was a kid, I used to look up to individuals who wore such nice white coats and who always brought lollipops with them – a Dentist. The reason for this was actually because I was a constant patient of our clinic center in Hinoba-an and I instantly became friends with the Dentist in charge. However, this did not last long until I saw how money really works around us. The moment I learned that wealth is the fundamental key to a comfortable life, my dream became bigger and that is to have a job where you get to receive money with limited work. Practically, what I always longed to do is to build my own business specifically in the dessert industry since I love baking. I plan to put up my own dessert shop and if I was able to do so, I would then venture into real estate like building a small house for an air bed and breakfast. Building my main business which is the dessert shop and having a passive income like the air bed and breakfast may secure me that if the other business is not stable then I still have one that could help me sustain the expenses that may be incurred with the loss.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

Being the pioneer batch to graduate with the new curriculum as well as the online set up it was very difficult to communicate and address some concerns with our work. Personally, I can say that the pandemic lessened my efficiency as well as my skills because we were limited to an online setup and the person who managed us when we were doing our on-the-job training was not able to properly give us our roles, goals, and specific jobs. It was stressful in a way that I was actually doing whatever it was that was required for us but at the end of the day, I felt like I had not learned anything. In the end, I tried to ask our agent if she could assign us to our designated roles and I was assigned as the marketing associate so I manage the page, make posters and would somehow relay messages to our agent about our progress.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

As a marketing associate, as per the description given by our agent, our role is to boost our page by inviting, sharing, and making publication materials about the page and the product itself. The task that I can say is a bit challenging since the agent knows me better than the other trainees sometimes, she would demand me about the works of the others instantly. Basically, we are given individual tasks and I do not really know the progress of the others so I am put on the pedestal to submit to her something that I do not have. The reason I found it challenging is because of the communication barrier that we have. She was not adapting well to the online set up so I have to check her through calls or ask someone from our group who is staying near the office to submit the files to her. But, if I look back, I think I somehow enjoyed making the publication materials since this had been my almost every output role when we were in college, I was always put into the creatives.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

A creative and proactive individual; the two given attributes are what I most often hear from my coworkers when asked about how they could describe me. I am actually surprised because I am not that good enough with art but I really just find it enjoyable to create something that I was imagining. Moreover, maybe they described me as proactive because I am someone who will not give up on something that I had set my hands on. For example, if given the challenge of becoming a leader of the group and having the bigger responsibility I would accept and will be positive that everything will work out well.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

As I was in the marketing program, I was appointed and elected to the position of treasurer of an academic club known as Marketers' Union and I can say that I am extremely proud of this achievement that I have. Given the opportunity to serve the student body and giving them activities to highlight and explore their course is the reason why I loved my role. I was serving, living, and enjoying my moment as a student, a leader, and also an individual. As a part of the officer, I am proud that we were able to be elected as one of the top five outstanding clubs among the many clubs that the school has.
