

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If it's at all possible, my dream job would be to work as a full-time illustrator, artist, or creative. the ability to express oneself freely without being constrained by commitments or financial worries. As an artist, there are some realities we must face that prevent us from pursuing our passions. We most certainly have a tendency to put art aside in favor of dealing with what is "practical," whether it be from attending art school or spending time creating art. I still hope to do it someday with my resources, though. I'll have to make sure that I will find the time to return to what I love doing. I'll work hard and invest in art materials, lessons, and activities after work. After work, I'll put in a lot of effort and spend money on art supplies, lessons, and activities. By doing so, I might gradually be able to view the world of art from a different angle and explore the possibilities. Hopefully, today or tomorrow will be that someday. I've at least taken a step toward realizing my dream.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

I balanced a lot of obligations while studying while in college. I was a working scholar at the time, so office work took up about half of my time when I was a student. The other half was spent doing homework, studying, and fitting in time for extracurricular activities as a regular student. I was able to join an art club as an extracurricular during my first year. I eventually received an unexpected appointment as the club president and was deluged with tasks I had never done before. There were times when I questioned my abilities and, as a result of pressure, experienced anxiety. Fortunately, I was able to deal with it since the people I knew reassured me and let me know that I wasn't alone and that asking for help wasn't a problem. Because I've learned to break old habits, be honest, and to learn to trust the people in my group, I was able to handle everything.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

In my previous work-related experiences, I was tasked with doing clerical and assisting with administrative tasks and work. Our office is assigned to security and safety, as well as the general services of the university. It is said to work as the "conciierge" of the university. By far, the most challenging task was to multitask; processing car sticker application forms while exerting the physical strength to go back and forth from the office to a parked vehicle and vice versa. Not to mention, the struggle to climb and place the sticker while wearing your school pencil skirt. Apart from the challenge, this task is also the most enjoyable because you will be able to meet new people in the process. At the one-time when I was able to put the sticker neatly, a toddler was cheering, "Yey!, good job!" as she seemed fascinated by the simple act.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

My coworkers and boss frequently praised my dedication, dependability, and responsiveness. They would remark on how quickly I submit a task or how laborious my organizing and word processing are. Because they trusted me with responsibility, I was frequently given leadership roles as well. Having responsibilities made me committed to trying my best and striving to submit a quality output. They acknowledge my artistic talent and depend on me for marketing and creative jobs because I am creative. People frequently come to me for assistance, particularly with simple graphic design or when they want an original piece of art created as a gift for a friend or family member. Aside from my abilities, they mention that I am a friendly person. I can be versatile and flexible despite my introversion and reserved demeanor, especially while speaking with different types of people. For instance, I would learn to keep up, put up the same effort, and go with the flow when interacting with outgoing people.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

Last month, I joined a mural painting competition with my friends. It was my first ever mural painting competition and being able to join was already an accomplishment for me. Thankfully, we were blessed to advance as the competition's third place winners, and it was by far my finest accomplishment and artistic milestone. Another achievement for me was finishing college as a working scholar. As a result of the K-12 curriculum and the pandemic, I have put in a lot of effort over the past four years, therefore for me, this sacrifice is well worth it. Lastly, being able to apply for my first actual job and being here at this very moment was also an achievement. I am proud that I came this far by my means and hard work. Ultimately, I am sincerely looking forward to what Pathcutters will take me in near future, in succeeding my personal milestones and accomplishments beyond.
