

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything was possible and I'm given the chance to pursue my dreams, I would pursue to become a flight attendant. It has been my long-life dream to become one. I remember vividly my first plane ride; the flight attendant was instructing us how the dos and don'ts inside the plane. I was just amazed at how elegant and sophisticated they looked. Also, I would get the chance to travel internationally and if given the chance, learn other culture as well even just for a little while. I was also told that one of the perks of being a flight attendant is that their family can travel for free, so I would love my family to enjoy that perks as well. I would love to provide my family their needs while also loving the job that I have because you're not really working when you love and enjoy the job that you do for a living.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

The most stressful situation that I had in my previous workplace would be clashing of personalities between colleagues and bullying. I've worked in the LGU before and my colleagues are of varying ages. My eldest colleague was around 56 years old and the youngest was around 20 years old. The age in the middle of this age bracket loves drama and usually creates tension in most cases. They usually pick on one of our colleagues who is younger than us. They would casually call her "fat" or "stupid" and that doesn't sit right with me. So, I called them out and in the most respectful way that I can asked them how would they feel if they we're treated the way they treat our colleague. I'm not usually the type to do that, but I also just can't sit back watching my colleague to be treated like that. I believe we should all be respected regardless of our differences.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

In my previous position as a data encoder for vaccination operations, the most challenging would be understanding the penmanship of the people filling out the forms that we are encoding. Our task is pretty simple but understanding a poorly filled-up form would affect the data that we are encoding to the system. Errors that might occur with poorly understanding these forms would be misspelled names, wrong information about the personal details of the vaccinee. These errors would result to not matching the vaccine card from the details that we have encoded. It means more complaints and also more work because we have to edit the correct information. I enjoyed the data encoding task because we would simply just fill up all the data needed and we were not really restricted to how much we can finish in a day. I also enjoy working on my own and still able to finish my task while working on my own pace.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

My previous supervisor or co-workers would describe me as someone who is quiet but also cooperative. I don't mingle that much especially if I'm new to the environment. I like to observe people and how things work in our workplace before I warmed up to the people that I worked with. I focus on my work and getting things done as soon as possible because I don't want to pile up my workload. On the contrary, I also like to be cooperative and get along with my colleagues really well. I can also work well together in a team; I'm a great follower and I could follow instructions really well. If I was asked to be involved in games or some sort, I also participate and practice being a good sport. I also smile a lot even though I don't know what to say at first, they always say that I'm the type of person that is approachable and just needs to be spoken to first.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

My recent accomplishment would be passing the initial trial process of this trial period. I would like to give kudos to myself for persistently trying to grow as a person and also professionally in my career. I know there are mishaps along the way of this trial but I'm glad to be able to get this far. I'm most proud of myself for pushing through the difficult times and the silent battles that I've overcome. I try not to sabotage myself anymore by encouraging myself with self-affirming words and being self-aware. I've seen a quote that says "Do not fear failure but rather fear not trying." and it's a quote that I live by. I always remind myself that great things happen when I don't stop trying, learning, and be open to new learnings. I believe I can achieve great things when I try because I'll never know the outcome unless I put myself out there to try.
