

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Everyone has their own dream job no matter what their current situation is. When I was younger, I have always been dreaming of what I really wanted to become when I grow up. At first, I really wanted to work in a banking institution because I like the thought of being able to see and hold a lot of money in real life. But of course, as time passes by and as I grow older, I realized that there is only one job that I really wanted for myself. If anything is possible, I would always want to become a flight attendant. I was never really thinking of how much I could get as a salary but all I was thinking is that I get to travel all the time in any location. With this job, I can travel to beautiful places anytime plus they also have a benefit which will allow your family to travel with you in some cases. By the way, I also love how they look in their own uniform and their posture is really amazing.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

We all have our own experiences when it comes to stressful situations in different workplaces. For me, the most stressful situation that I encountered was during my first job after college. It was my first time going to a new place and I don't really know anyone. I only have myself to rely on. I really tried my best to fit in and to have friends even though I was new in the call center industry. It was really a challenge for me, and it also became too stressful since I am putting a lot of pressure on myself. It even became worse when I encountered a leader who didn't even allow me to explain and would just embarrass me right away in front of other people. Luckily, I have colleagues who would encourage me to move forward. They all motivated me to be at my best and prove that person wrong and I am really thankful to them.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

In my previous position, I was able to face different challenges. Most challenging for me is being assigned as a mentor to new hires. I am the kind of person who would prefer staying on the side, listening, and observing what everyone else is doing. I am really not a fan of speaking in front of everyone, especially in a large crowd. But when an opportunity was given to me, I took the risk and faced my fear. I learned to face them. I learned to speak and present reports in front of everyone. I become confident in initiating debriefing sessions and deliberations. What I really enjoyed the most about that position is being able to present to our higher operations and clients the improvements of the new hire throughout their training period. It's a different kind of fulfillment for me to see that person learn from me and pass.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

I could say that people can describe me in different ways. There could be times when the people who know me outside work can describe me somewhat differently from my coworkers. The first thing that my previous manager and coworkers would say is that I am a silent person because they know that most of the time, I am just on the side observing everyone. They will also describe me as professional because I can handle different situations calmly and professionally. They can also tell you that I am a positive thinker since I always look on the bright side even if the situation is really not that good. I will just look forward to something good that will happen in the future. Lastly, I know that they would describe me as the kind of person who really listens to feedback. I always value their advice to me since I know that it will just help me with my performance.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

We all have our own accomplishments that we are really proud of. I have a lot of those personal and professional accomplishments that I am proud of the most. Personally, I am really proud of myself for being able to pay for my own tuition during college, though it's not really the entire four years. I was able to balance my studies and a part-time job. I am also proud to say that I was able to send my sister to school and help her with her studies even though she was not really able to finish college due to the pandemic. Another accomplishment is that I was able to start building our own home. It really feels different that you can see the fruit of your hard work. My professional accomplishments involve being a top performer and a mentor because it only means that I did my best and it resulted in these achievements. Right now, I am doing my best to be able to earn another professional accomplishment.
