

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

I aspire to become either a computer engineer, IT technician, or software engineer. This aspiration started when I was young; I loved tinkering, often disassembling my battery-powered toys and then reassembling or merging them into something new. During my teenage years, I became tech-savvy, always eager to explore the settings and compare specifications of new phones and gadgets, such as processor, RAM, and ROM. Although I truly wanted to pursue a job aligned with my passion, I had to consider my family's financial capabilities. This prompted me to pursue a different major that would be easier for my family to support and provide better opportunities.

I am still young, and there is so much time ahead of me. Maybe if time permits, I will go back to school and take a course that would allow me to pursue my passion and do the things that I want. Alternatively, I might find a job as a management accounting graduate that is also aligned with technology.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

Yes, I have experienced a lot of stressful situations back in my college years. Firstly, during exams, I used to cram all the information the night before the exam day, forcing me to stay up all night to study everything as I relied on memorization. Consequently, it took me a significant amount of time to cover all the exam material. To address this, I started studying a week or two before the exams, allowing me enough time to create a reviewer and thoroughly study everything.

Another stressful situation arose during our research/thesis course when I had to act as the leader of our group. It was very challenging since, in addition to handling my own part, I also had to supervise and check on my groupmates' work to ensure they were on the right track. The stress intensified when they submitted their work a day before the deadline, leaving me to revise everything on my own. To prevent this from happening again, I took a more organized approach as a leader. I assigned them tasks with reasonable deadlines and provided them with various references so that they could work independently, reducing my need to give them step-by-step instructions. These were the stressful situations I encountered during my college years.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

As a former intern at an accounting company, one task that proved difficult for me was auditing the company's financial statements. The company's CPA asked for my assistance in the audit process and jokingly mentioned that I would be liable to the company's clients if I didn't check everything properly. Taking the task seriously, I meticulously reviewed everything word-for-word, from the VAT schedule to the financial statements. It was challenging because the financial statements had been prepared by the company's bookkeeper, who was supervising me. Any errors I found would reflect on her. However, I persevered and was able to spot minor errors, which I then discussed with our bookkeeper and accountant.

Despite the challenges I encountered, the auditing task mentioned above was also the most enjoyable during my internship. It allowed me to apply the theoretical knowledge gained throughout my four years in college and provided a deeper understanding of the practical application of accounting principles.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

If my previous managers or co-interns were to describe me, they would say I am a kind and dedicated intern. Kindness is essential because it promotes harmonious relationships in the workplace. Therefore, I always try to embody this trait by being polite and open with others. As a dedicated intern, I always strive for improvement. When given a task, I put my best effort into it to ensure the highest quality of output.

Additionally, if my previous professors and classmates were to describe me, they would call me studious and an excellent student. Being studious is a characteristic I've had since I was young. I view education as a crucial aspect of my success, so I take my studies seriously and am always conscious of my grades, which is why I dedicate a lot of time to studying. Consequently, my professors and teachers have noticed my efforts, and some have even praised me for achieving the highest marks in our exams.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

As a fresh graduate, the greatest accomplishment that I am proud of is my academic record. They are a reflection of my perseverance and dedication throughout the 16 years of my education. From elementary school to college, I was able to maintain good grades. Despite being part of the batch severely affected by the pandemic and the shift to online classes, I still managed to maintain my status as a Dean's Lister almost throughout college. During my middle school years, I graduated as the overall top student in my accountancy business management track, and I ranked as the overall top 2 of the entire school. These accomplishments are the fruits of my hard work, which reflect my ideals in life. While things may not have gone exactly as I envisioned due to circumstances beyond my control, I am proud of myself for trying and not giving up despite those hardships.
