

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

- My dream job is to become a Translator because I am interested in learning languages, and it needs dedication and effort to achieve it. When I see a person speak a lot of languages it makes me think that I want to be like that person. Learning another country's language can also be interesting because you can also learn about how they live their lives and how unique one country's culture is from another. That's why being a translator is a dream job for me because if ever I am one, I can get to know more about a country because I can speak their language and can express more to the locals. Being a translator helps people from different countries to understand each other by helping them translate each other's language. There is a wide range of practices that a translator can work in, may it be in business, research, written documents, entertainment, etc, and I think being a translator makes life more interesting.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

- When I was working in my previous job, the training days as a scribe were sort of a stressful situation because it was a new thing and can be very challenging, you need to be a good listener and have fast typing skills but, in my case, I'm an intermediate typist so in order to achieve my task, what I did was to type in only the keywords first and edit it later on since there was still time to do proofread before saving the final output. Another thing that was stressful to me that time was when I was training a new virtual scribe and that person is from a non-English speaking country, it was hard to communicate because the person I'm training cannot fully understand the things that I was saying, and I had to do translations at some point in order for that person to get my point.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

- In my previous work, the task that I found most challenging was being a live scribe, because I needed to update the medical records in a live setting. The dosages of medications, frequency of exercises, interpretation of drug test results, and diagnostics results need to be accurate since these will be rechecked by the state. At first, it was overwhelming because everything is happening all at once but when I got used to it after a month, I was able to get on my pace and start loving it. Although it was challenging, I was very thankful to my client because he was very helpful and didn't make me feel anxious when I was just a trainee. Doing a live scribe was the task that I enjoyed the most. However, I also enjoyed the time when I did data entry. In this task, I input the patient's new data according to what was written in the visit form. That task was easy, but it was fun doing it.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

- My managers/coworkers describe me as a small girl who doesn't talk much. They always say to me that I am only talkative to people that I'm comfortable with. I can say that I agree with what they said about me because I don't know what to talk about with people that I don't know yet and I observe how they approach me first before I take the initiative with conversation and aside from that I always reciprocate how people treat me. Another thing that they said about me is that I take my job seriously. I have strong work ethic and whenever I'm asked to do something, I see to it that I do my part without compromising the quality of work although there might be times that I might miss out something in relevance to my tasks but I try to take note of it and do my best not to repeat the same mistakes again.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

- My personal or professional accomplishment that I'm most proud of is passing the licensure exam for physical therapists while working. My journey in achieving my license is a big milestone for me because before I achieved that four-letter title, I had to surpass the trials that had come to me such as my exam being postponed three times because of Covid-19 and losing my will to achieve my goal of passing the exam. I decided to stop my review and find work to help my family and to keep me occupied. While I was working, I realized that I still wanted to get my license because that is my goal after college and so I pursued it. I did self-review and worked at the same time. It was hard because I was working night shift and had to read book reviews the following day or during breaks while on duty. I already told myself that I will only take it once because it might not be for me and didn't set expectations, but by the grace of God, I took the risk, passed the exam first take, and earned the four-letter title that I was dreaming of and I'm very thankful that I also get to practice my profession now while doing home care to patients during the weekends.
