

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

- I have several dream jobs, but today I will only list two dream jobs that I want. First, I would love to work in the back office and support the day-to-day operations of the business. I always aspired to be like my mom when I grew up. She was the personal secretary of her boss, and she assists with the day-to-day operations of the business. I would want to work for a job like that as well – working behind the scenes. This second dream job is a recent one, to be a tour promoter. I saw this one video where she is a tour/concert promoter and I instantly thought of how I want that as well to be my job. Being a tour/concert promoter, it's like hitting two birds with one stone because I will be able to see, in person, the idols that I love and as well as earn a decent amount of money.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

- College will always have something stressful to offer to the students. But, to particularly point out a stressful situation, that would be conducting a research and feasibility study plus the uncooperative group mates that you have. We conducted a feasibility study, and now we need to work on our financial statements and pass this output because we are already near our deadline. I sent a message in our group chat saying that I need help in making our financial statement because the leader and I cannot do this on our own. They did not acknowledge my message or anything, so we just started doing the financial statements on our own. The funny thing is we cannot balance our financial statements and so we informed them about the situation. This was the only time that they panicked and did what they were supposed to do, which is to help. We stayed up until dawn trying to balance that financial statement and still, we were late in submitting that partial feasibility study. I just calmed myself down and just did what I could do to balance that financial statement and submit it before everything would be too late and our adviser won't let us march in our graduation rites.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

- In college, I think the task that I find the most challenging would be the research and feasibility study. This task really requires your physical and mental strength and money. You feel like you're being put up with a challenge of being patient when looking up reliable and up-to-date related literature and studies that will support your hypothesis. Also, you cannot just cram, make statements just so you can fill out every part of the study and copy-paste every piece of information that you find on the Internet because that would render your study to not be satisfactory and plagiarized. This task was challenging in the sense that you need to be meticulous, thorough, and patient whilst making the study.

I am passionate about dancing, and so the task that I really enjoy the most would be participating in dance competitions for our school events such as pop dance and cheer dance. Even though the practice is tiring and draining, I still love doing things like this. Also, I enjoyed my work in the Internal Audit department the most during my internship at Yusay Credit. We were tasked to verify cash movement control and check vouchers with their cash disbursement books, cash collections, bank transactions, and official receipts.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

- I had great relationships with my classmates and peers in elementary, high school and college. They really know me well, who I am as a person and how I treat other people. I think my previous classmates would describe me as a "perfectionist" when doing some big tasks like, for example, the research and feasibility study. I was always in charge of checking the submitted tasks assigned to my groupmates and making sure that it was correct and would be perfect to add to the research draft. Also, I think that they would describe me as someone who really weighs things and choices first before deciding on what course of action to take, whom am I going to side with the situation, and how to properly respond to a situation or person without hurting anyone's feelings. Moreover, I think that would also mean that they would describe me as considerate and understanding if it is still reasonable.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

- There is this one thing that my parents would always and constantly remind me of when I was growing up and that is, "education cannot be taken away from you". Whatever chance they can get, they would always include that in our conversation and tell me how the knowledge that I have accumulated and the experiences that I gained will be forever imprinted in my brain and life and it will not perish - that is my treasure. And so, I have always brought this lesson, this reminder with me and instilled in my brain that no matter what the circumstances and hurdles that I need to go through just to have an education, I will earn a degree and graduate college. With this, I can say that one of my proudest personal accomplishments is pushing through college, no matter what the obstacles have happened and graduating from college and earning a degree.
