

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

My dream job is to be a performer in a musical both in the Philippines and abroad. Growing up, music became a part of my childhood. I would always wake up in the morning hearing old songs from the 80's or 90's which are my father's favorite songs. He taught me how to sing and since then, I grew my love for music which became a part of me. I also started to learn to play guitar. My cousin was the one who taught me how to play it. At first, I was not interested because the strings hurt my fingers. But after just knowing one simple song, I began to have interest. That is how I was influenced by music. I have watched one musical movie where I really gained interest in performing arts. Watching talented people excel in music inspires me to develop my skills to be better at it as well. I wanted to be in a musical because I would love to learn the technicalities when it comes to performing and singing. Also, to have that kind of discipline the actors and actresses have.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

My most stressful experience in my college years was making our thesis. Many students would agree with this because it is a common challenge for most college students to struggle with this task. Not only does it require so much work, but the duration of a thesis is long-term. We started our thesis in the second semester of our third year and it ended in the first semester of our fourth year. The most difficult task was going back and forth between our school and the school where we were conducting our data gathering. It requires time management since we have classes, and the availability of the teachers and the students involved was also a struggle for us. We also had a hard time finishing our task by our deadline because we were a bit late waiting for everyone involved. We also did not know what to do next, and we had other tasks on our subjects. But despite that, we were able to finish it.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

During my short internship, we experienced a lot of things that helped us get ready for the job when we already finished college. We were able to see what would happen when we finally applied for a job. The most challenging task during our internship was to learn the routine of the office. We were assigned a task wherein we needed to give an overview of the company, and we had to memorize it within the week so we could do it in the following week. At first, I struggled with memorizing it and preparing myself to speak in front of people that I don't know, but I was able to do this task with the help of our trainers. What I enjoyed the most was our task to observe an interview and we were able to have a discussion with the interviewer about how we can spot a good applicant and how we should assess them.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

My previous instructors described me as a happy and diligent person. When I was in school, I always started my day with a smile. I was always seen as a person who is extroverted and always having fun. My instructors always liked that about me. Whenever I'm in the class I always enjoy the discussion especially when I can relate to it. Sometimes, the teachers would joke about our topic, and I was always quick to respond to it with a laugh while my classmates were still processing it. Their description is actually true. I don't like making things complicated and I always want to remain optimistic about things because I don't want to stress all the time. I was also commended by one of our instructors for being diligent, especially when it comes to requests and tasks that they are giving us. That is how my instructors see me.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

My most recent achievement this year was to graduate from college. I am proud of this achievement because I know that I have worked for it and that I didn't give my parents problems during my studies. Going to college is optional for me because my parents gave me the freedom to decide whether I would continue my studies for college or not. I was also hesitant about going to college because of the tuition but luckily, I found a school that has free tuition and has the course I really want to take. Even though I struggled because it felt like I was fighting alone and there were challenges during those years, I was able to finish it. In addition to that, there was the pandemic. During those years, I was having difficulties understanding our lessons because we had them online, but I just tried my best and I was able to pass during those years.
