

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Without any circumstances in achieving my dream job, it would be a Police Officer. This was not my dream when I was young, I am more on imagining myself working in an office, sitting in a swivel chair, and facing the computer doing some clerical work. But as I grew older, I realized that I have this passion to serve people, give aid, or extend my hand to them. I have taken an examination that would make me eligible to pursue my dream career which I have just discovered. Now that I am eligible to apply for the role, I think the universe prohibits me from achieving that dream because I am diagnosed with mild scoliosis in my lower back. However, that did not affect my passion to serve and help people. It made me realize that I could help anyone without being a police officer.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

I have been involved in some school organizations and became an officer in it. In there, we were tasked to facilitate some activities or programs. There were times when activities and programs overlapped with each other, and administrative tasks like communication and approval letters, and sending of program itinerary to school faculty would prohibit me from doing things on time. On my first day of becoming an officer, I was really overwhelmed with the obligations, but as I went through, I was able to manage it. I learned how to take notes of the task or things that should be done and put due on it including its time to be accomplished. I have always my small notebook with me during that time where I can write everything that is needed to be accomplished. In that way, I was able to keep track of my tasks and would be able to go back in it if something urgent came.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

I had been an active Internal Vice-President and BSBA (Bachelor of Science in Business Administration) Representative in my college days and during my internship at school. So, I consider my participation to some school organizations as part of internship, since I do it simultaneously with my internship tasks. The most challenging part of becoming an internal vice president is that I must attend some meetings in case our president is not available. Most of the time, I don't have an idea of what the meeting is all about, so I have to cram and ask our president for some details about the meeting. In that way, I'll be able to research it and give my insights into it during the meeting. On the other hand, as a BSBA Representative, the most challenging task I had was to lay out some event programs for school activities. Our adviser in that organization was very strict and attentive to details, so every time he noticed something wrong even if it was minimal and unnoticeable, we had to redo it again. Overall, it was challenging but I was able to learn a lot of things from it.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

During my internship, I was assigned to the Business Administration department's office. My previous co-officers and advisors would probably describe me as considerate, focused, and dedicated. I always consider their situation every time I make a decision, may it be for the food to order, or my time to go home. I had so little task during my internship, so I had more time to meddle with my superior who is the chairperson of our school department. If ever we have time to talk, I always ask him about the things that officers could do something into. Most of the time, I am searching for ways to extend the responsibility of officers to something that is relevant, so I always take time to ask our department chair about the things where we could lend a hand. I am so happy with the internship journey although I was not able to have it outside our school. Through it, I was able to leave a good impression on our chairperson before I left and face the real world.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

I consider the cum laude award I have received during graduation as my personal accomplishment. I have worked hard for it from the day I started my journey in the university. It is my way of giving appreciation to what my parents had worked hard for in sending me to school and getting a college degree. I spend most of my time studying and I always aim for excellence in everything that I do. Aside from that, it had given me a reason to be dedicated to everything that I do, especially things related to academics. Another accomplishment I am proud of is that I am starting to overcome my dependent personality as an only child. Right now, I am starting to establish my career, I am proud of myself for doing it independently. I am now moving at my own pace, and I am ready to face upcoming challenges that may come my way.
