

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

- I honestly wanted to be an airline pilot but flying school is so expensive let alone having to rent an aircraft for your training and increase your number of hours flying. When I was younger, I wanted to be a flight attendant, but it all changed when I watched a documentary on National Geographic about air crash investigations, rather than traumatizing me it made me more interested in becoming an airline pilot. I still watch the documentary series up to this day when I have free time, it's tragic to watch the crashes especially if no one comes out alive, but there are also episodes where you get that great sense of relief because everyone survived, my favorite episode would be the miracle landing of an U.S Airways flight on the Hudson river lead by Captain Sully Sullenberger. I love being on an aircraft, I love the feeling of being up in the sky and getting that amazing landscape and ocean views and best of all you get to travel for free.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

- In my past workplace I don't think there's been a week where you cannot not be stressed out since we are less than 25 employees but somehow need a lot of manpower especially when there are a lot of desktops that needs to be assembled. There was this one time when we had to deliver 15 sets of computer desktop to a client. The CPU should consist of a casing, power supply, motherboard, processor, solid state drive, hard disk drive and a memory. Everything was prepared for set up, but the SSD (solid state drive) was still on hold since it still needed to be ordered from the supplier so that was the last item to be assembled so the computers could boot up. It was on hold for a week or two. The day before we deliver the items, I noticed in our system that the SSD's that have arrived for the client has not been allocated for them, which it should have been, so we know that the SSD's were mounted on the CPU's. Our shift ends at 5:30PM, I noticed the error 5:00PM since I was double checking everything before being loaded to the truck so I took immediate action to get those SSD's and inform the technical team so they can also work on the situation immediately I was the only admin staff willing to go overtime and assist the technical team on their further needs. In the end, we finished setting up the desktops at 8:00PM and did not delay the scheduled delivery.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

- Honestly, the collection task was the most challenging to me because you can't control the clients when they will pay their remaining balances even if they are their due. Even when you want to give your clients a good scolding because on how delay they pay you can't because they have their system that they follow. I enjoy opening and receiving our item stocks the most although it is not my consistent work, I have the authority to do it when my accounting supervisor is not around, she entrusted me with tasks especially that time when she was on maternity leave. I find it exciting since I will be able to see and give answers to my questions such as "What kind of item is that? What is its purpose? How does it work" or I just go saying "So that's what it looks like" like they say curiosity kills.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

- My supervisor once told me I was like a mini her. She was hardworking, She didn't need men to help her even carrying heavy items when she can do it on her own, especially when the time is running, and you have tasks that needs to be done but there is no available hand for back up. Frankly, I got that attitude from her. If I can do it on my own, I will do it. If I can lift and get things that need to be used and need to be sold, I will do it. We have our jobs that needs to be done, you can't always be relying on men to do all the lifting when women can do it too. She is also a multi-tasker, she is on the sales team, accounting, technical almost all the department she is linked to it and I was also assigned to learn that, to be flexible.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

- I'm proud I got through my college days even though I almost gave up. I would call it an accomplishment since I got through my silent battles. My mom passed away just when I was about to graduate from senior high school. We had financial struggles, the plans my mom had for me for college all changed because we struggled financially. But gladly, the free tuition for state colleges and universities was approved. Our batch was the first one, I applied and passed the entrance exams and initial interview the stars were brightly being aligned for me at that moment. It was a 4-year roller coaster ride; I am thankful for the people I met throughout my college journey. Those who supported me all the way and helped me physically, emotionally, financially and spiritually. Without them I wouldn't be where I am today. My diploma will always be my biggest achievement in life.
