

1.If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Given the chance that I can choose what my dream job could be, I dream of becoming an Engineer. Ever since I was kid, I have loved looking around building structures and automobiles, I used to tell myself "How does this thing work?" "How is this thing created?" and that's where my intrusive thoughts came in that I really want to pursue Engineering to figure out how things work and how they function around us. My love and passion for cars didn't stop me there when I was young until now, I used to create and design drawings of famous automobile brands such as Lamborghini, Ferrari, and the like.

My hopes and dreams fell apart when I could be part of the production and design team for automobile brands if I ever pursued the course of Engineering, that's why I always think of a secondary plan for my dream job, and that is to travel around the destinations being a Flight Attendant. I find traveling among other places as my favorite hobby which I explore and discover new things that are new around me every day. When I first rode on a plane, I was enticed and thrilled by the feeling above the clouds and seeing the landscapes and waters beneath me looking around the beauty of our surroundings.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

When I was in my first years of college, I always thought about how stressful my life can be as a student, yet there are certain adjustments that you should be aware of since it could be different depending on where you came from and how it works inside the institution. Personally, I have no problem in terms of academics, I always study during my free time or available tasks given to me that can be finished within the day so that I have no backlogs and refrain from procrastinating. It just so happens that in college; you must be quick and decisive especially in choosing your subject units because your life depends on the time schedule and the professor of your subjects. It's just a mere coincidence that I survived college based on the capability and tolerance of the teachers I encountered during college, and I thank God for that.

Additionally, what is more stressful is that your fellow classmates on the class code itself or the groups assigned to you are more dreadful than you think it is. I thought my life would be much easier with their help, but instead, it was more of a burden on my part where I must redo again and cover for their part and responsibilities. Thankfully with patience and understanding along the way, I have managed to keep myself holistic and always composed, with the help of my friends, family and motivation from a special someone.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

Since I'm a fresh graduate and haven't experienced formal work yet, I haven't encountered tasks that I may find very challenging during my internship days. First, I was tasked with the Marketing and Sales Department, it was fairly okay, to say the least since it was still my first month, and I am still trying to familiarize myself and be part of the management in their day-to-day operations. The manager there was very polite, kind-hearted, sincere, and understanding. She only gives tasks that are not a burden to us interns since she is handling prominent tasks that include data and documents that contain valuable information.

When I was already in the Admin and Accounting Department, this was where the heavy tasks came in, and have spent most of the time working with them. It all contains invoices of procurement of goods and items that are essential to the company I was tasked to collate and organize the documents accordingly and collectively by its date. It just so happens that it was ranging from the month of September until February. Imagine the delay of backlog from that department and it was finally resolved when we were there helping and giving an extra hand. However, I am still thankful for the learnings and knowledge that I have experienced from my internship.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

In my previous Internship, my manager would describe me that I was productive at work and attentive since whenever there is a task involved, I immediately work on it so that the manager can finish what she's responsible for doing and dealing with other clients. I always inform my manager once I'm already done so that when there is a task available to be done, I can work on it afterwards.

My coworkers are also somehow friendly, and they used to be my friends and co-interns as well, they always told me that I am chill and productive, also referring to me as a workaholic type of person as they say, it just so happened that it's a busy company because every day there are clients and bookings that will be set on a future dates, so all inquiries and responsibilities must be done before the end of the day.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

Personally, there are numerous personal accomplishments that I have done that I am proud of in the past few years. I have finally finished and graduated from my academics and now officially a degree holder. But what I am really proud of myself for are my developed time management skills and the exposure to other people. This all occurred during my internship phase where life is more engaging to new opportunities and discover what capabilities that you can do.

But the accomplishments in life don't stop when you think you have already finished and obtained what you desire in life, I am still searching for my purpose in life and what my future holds upon entering new challenges and opportunities. I hope that one day I can finally have a decent job and earn a decent amount of money, just a way to give back for the hard work that my mom has sacrificed and to raise me well apart from all the distress.
