

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything was possible, my dream job would be to become a lawyer because I like arguing with people despite my introversion. I see it as a way to enhance my speaking abilities as well as my logical reasoning. Law is something that I want to explore. Aside from the reasons I enumerated above, I would also like to help those people who are in need of justice. I know Law is very hard and to become a lawyer is harder. But despite that fact, I know to myself that I can be one. It is required for those who aspire to be a lawyer to be a consistent reader, and I am one who loves to read books. I also love the feeling of winning an argument— it feels fulfilling. And it is great to know that if ever I will be a lawyer, I will achieve fulfillment and at the same time, help people achieve justice.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

The stressful situation that I have been in back in college is running after deadlines. We once had this field study book that we needed to finish for the whole second semester, and since I was also the chairman of our university's Parliamentary Team, I had to initiate the practice for our upcoming contest, hence, I did not have the luxury of time to answer my field study book because I was too focused with the upcoming competition. Additionally, the whole second semester was also our OJT, so I had a very hectic schedule during that time. My everyday routine was to finish my OJT during the day and when I go home in the afternoon, I will have to stop by our university first and call the Parliamentary team for practice. And after that is the only time that I can officially go home and answer my field study book. However, when I got home, I was tired and had no time to answer the book. So, what I did was manage my time. While I was on OJT duty, I also worked on my field study book, and eventually, I finished it before the deadline.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

In my previous position back in college as an Editor-in-Chief of our university's publication, the task that I found the most challenging was checking my writers' work. It was very stressful because some of my writers are not that good in writing as well as with the English language. I had to rearrange the flow of most of their writings and make sure that they followed the inverted pyramid template, grammar, and syntax. However, the task I enjoyed the most was laying out the articles to be printed for physical copies. It was a very fun experience noting that I am not familiar with navigating and using the MS Publisher software. My skills in laying out articles were only learned through watching YouTube videos and reading tutorials online. I also got some inspiration from printed magazines and newspapers. Somehow, I managed to finish the layout and we got it printed to be distributed to the students.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

If my previous managers or coworkers describe me, they will say that I am very systematic and focused in doing my responsibilities because back in college, during our OJT at an Elementary School, we were tasked to prepare a demonstration every two weeks. The school I was assigned to was very far from my place, so it was inevitable that on some days I would be late. Last time, it was the day that we presented our teaching demonstration, but despite being late, I still managed to exhibit the proper way of presenting my lectures with the students and get a high score from my cooperating teacher. Her comments were about how I laid out my visual aids in a smooth flow, and she asked me how I easily knew what to show next and what to say next. I told her that I had practiced the flow of my discussion, and I stacked my visual aids in the correct order a day before my demonstration so that I would not worry about what would come next and what to say next.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

The personal accomplishment I am most proud of was winning the Parliamentary Procedure contest back in college as the presiding chairman. I joined the team when I was in my first year, but when the COVID-19 pandemic hit, there was no competition for two consecutive years. Only when I got to my fourth year in college that I join the competition again, this time as the presiding chairman. I was nervous at first, but the other members kept pushing me for the position. So, what I did was study the rules and how to correctly execute the motions. With the help of the previous presiding chairman, we religiously devoted our time to practice every afternoon after our classes. And as the saying goes, "Practice makes perfect," we won the competition with the highest score. I was very proud at that moment because, despite my stage fright and the anxiety that built up, I was able to give the audience a great performance.
