

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything was possible, my dream job would be to become a lawyer. This dream started when I was 7 years old. To impose justice on the persons who brutally killed my grandparents. My grandfather was stabbed 36 times in the head, and we cannot recognize him because of the stitches made. My grandmother was shot twice, in her left chest and right thigh. These flashbacks of brutal experiences always came back to my mind when my dream job was asked. I hated the people who did these things to my grandparents, but time heals all wounds. Especially the wound that scares me from moving on. When I met my Savior, I learned how to forgive but it is not easy to forget what they did. The dream of being a lawyer continues within me but not to seek justice for myself alone but also for those who are deprived of it.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

I have experienced a lot of stressful experiences from my past workplace. One example is the time when I forgot to rebuild the program that I made for a specific running model that was running that day. I remembered that I did not rebuild it when I got to my apartment at 8:30 P.M. I was so stressed that I wanted to go back to the company just to rebuild it because it had an urgent shipment the next day. What I did was call my supervisor and tell her what happened. She told me that she could rebuild it from her house because the PC in the company can be remote using TeamViewer. I just contacted some trained and authorized personnel to watch the computer in case some errors occur. It was a success, and we met the shipment after that day. I learned from this situation that there are people who can help you in times of your stressful moments. Just give them a call or send them a message, they surely have an idea address the issue.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

In my previous position, the task I was challenged with the most was doing the actual wiring from the wiring diagram I designed. I find it hard to strip wires using a wire cutter and a long-nose plier, especially the bigger ones. It is also challenging to make the wiring as neat as possible, because I need to consider other people when they debug the fixture that I made. This task made me a resourceful one, and I raised issues regarding wiring fixtures that were applied to the department in the latter part.

The task I enjoy the most is the programming part. We, the Technicians, are tapped sometimes to do the programming for the Engineers, especially when they are loaded with tasks. This task enables me to use my college background in programming. I gained more knowledge in programming, especially in utilizing the Visual Studio. Google was my friend every time there were complex formulas I needed to automate. Resources and the people who are more knowledgeable about the task are dependable in doing complicated tasks every time.

4. How would your previous managers/coworkers describe you?

My previous managers described me as a devoted employee. I am better than my best every time tasks are assigned to me. I will always abide by the company's guidelines and core values in everything I do. I complain sometimes, but for me, it is not complaining since I am stating issues regarding the task so that it would be easier and safer for me to accomplish it. I am focusing on the results of the tasks assigned and giving attention to the process of how I do it. So that if given the chance to teach someone I can clearly show them how.

My coworkers described me as an "easy to go with" type of person. I acknowledge boundaries and limitations. I know when or how to approach them casually and formally. They told me that I was their clown when they felt stressed from a 12-hour shift. I made them feel comfortable when they were in a new place or environment. I may not be able to help them with the problems they had at work, but I can help them overcome and forget it for a while.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

The personal accomplishment I am most proud of is deciding to quit my previous job and answer God's calling. I am proud that God called me to work in His mission field. I am proud to quit the job I had to go back to Negros and be used here in the ministry. Every Saturday I went to different meal centers we have in Talisay City to teach Bible Stories to children. Every Sunday, my father assigned me to preach in our Sunday morning service and lead the youth fellowship every Sunday afternoon. Some will say I quit because my previous job was hard. I considered quitting that job a big stepping stone for my faith. I don't know if my life would be easier or if I would experience hardships, especially in the mission field. But what I know the most is that God's grace is enough to sustain me daily. He will never leave my side and will always be in my every endeavor.
