

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything was possible, my ultimate dream job would be to become a pilot. Back when I was in pre-school, I didn't pay much attention to the "when I grow up, I want to be a..." part of graduation. Without much thought, to be a pilot was the thing that blurted out of my mouth. Fast forward to my high school days, it just occurred to me one day that what I said back then is still the profession that I want in the future. The thought of flying and navigating in the skies fascinates me.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

One notable stressful situation that happened to me back at my old workplace was there's this one customer, a regular one, that insists that the product he received was in wrong size even though we both come to an agreement about the order, and everything is clear before he left the shop. He is persistent in insisting while I reiterated to him detail by detail the instruction that he himself gave. To not let matters get worse, I told him that we'll just wait for my supervisor to arrive and settle the issue.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

Graphics design was the most challenging and the most enjoyable task for me. It is challenging in the sense that there were times that I am overloaded with projects that I need to complete before the deadline, it happens most especially in holiday seasons, and it drains my creativity for a time. However, it was also the most enjoyable task for me because it challenges me to be creative, to discover new techniques, to learn more about the nature of the topic that I am creating a design for, to interpret ideas into a visual product.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

Knowing myself, when it comes to a task that is assigned to me, I would exert all my efforts to create quality work while accomplishing it on time. As to my attitude, I always treat everyone with respect and kindness and be accommodating and professional towards customers. I can say that I am a good colleague and a person who has a high regard for work ethics.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

An accomplishment that I am most proud of, and for which is in the middle of professional and personal is, being able to create music for a local film. It is still in the works as of now, but it is one of the big projects that I am proud to work on.
