

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything was possible, my dream job would be a Police Officer. I have been rooting for this dream job since I was in high school. For context, one time, I remember the story of my mom that my dad's dream job was to become a police officer, but my dad didn't have the means to continue his studies, so he wasn't able to pursue that job.

Now that I finished college, one thing on my bucket list is to take exams related to the job I want. Hopefully, I will be qualified to be one of the police officers in the country. Also, to give honor to my late dad, who gave me the idea on how to become one, he gave me ideas about being an officer and where and how to take exams. To have that job is not only because of my dad, it is also my willingness because of the things that have been happening lately, like the crimes, the unjust treatments, and the unjust serving of justice. I badly wanted to serve our country.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

In my previous workplace, the most stressful situation that happened to me was when me and my supervisor had an argument over a petty thing. We eventually had the chance to talk about it since we were friends (outside work), and I thought everything would be fine afterwards. However, she did some things which made me think that she was still not over it and still hold some grudges on me. I also didn't ask our manager to address our issue because she was friends with my supervisor, I know she would just side with her. I have no one to run to. Despite everything that happened, I then kept in mind that not everyone I refer as my friends-are my friends. From then on, I just go to work, make sure things are done before shift ends, then go home. I started to treat everyone as a colleague, not a friend. I did not mind her or what had happened, until I had the courage to leave my previous job for my own peace of mind.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

The task that I find the most challenging is assisting customers-especially the older ones who are not tech savvy. You really need to have a lot of patience in you because who knows how long you will be in that conversation. There might be times as well that you have to repeat the same instructions over and over.

The task that I enjoy the most is answering the customer's inquiry/concern. I like to give them a callback so I could walk them through on where or how to find such info they are looking for, I sometimes send instructions if their phone is unreachable.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

I would say, dedicated and goal oriented. In my previous company, we had these target metrics on a daily or weekly basis. Say we must reach that said number of surveys from customers and we need to comply by the end of the week. Being dedicated to our work, me and my colleague would render overtime hoping we can stock more surveys. Being dedicated is also being cooperative and responsible because you made efforts and already did your part.

Goal oriented. I would make sure that I was able to do the tasks assigned for me and I often check if I achieved the outcome that I have in my mind

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

I will go ahead with the personal accomplishment.

The personal accomplishment that I am most proud of is being able to finish college. I have been a working student since first year college, and I started working around midterm in school until I graduated. I have overcome those challenges I encountered throughout my college years, when in fact I already have thoughts in my mind that I should stop studying and just focus on working instead so I can help my family being a bread winner back then.

I am proud of myself because even in times that I need financial support, I really tried my best to make ends meet because I always said to myself not to be a burden to my mom anymore.

Here I am now, the very first degree holder in our family. I was able to say that I made it this far despite of the challenges that I encountered.
