

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything is possible and it is according to what I want in my life, my dream job is to be a teacher. I do love teaching, but it sometimes drains you. I love to teach about arts, especially theater. I could say that it is my dream job because I love inculcating young minds about the beauty of theater arts. I love doing workshops and seeing them explore while having fun in my class. Teaching requires you to be more compassionate and energetic. This dream job requires you to not just teach. It is beyond teaching. Planning a great program and lesson plan is nice but not until you give up your sleeping schedule. A teacher is a guide on the side. They are the light of a student's path. They are lighting the candle for them but sometimes they forgot to light their own candles. Teaching is my dream job, but I had a lot of considerations on becoming one.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

In my last workplace, my co-teachers were all amazing. The stressful situation that I always encounter is dealing with parents about the child's update and when there is an upcoming school event. I always discuss it with them properly, but some had many questions. Some questions that are raised must be directly brought to the management. I always communicate with the principal and admin if there are questions that I don't know the answer. I discuss the answer with politeness and professionalism to the parents. Another stressful situation is when a group of students are always in the guidance office. I manage to be calm whenever they make mistakes and listen to their explanation. I talk to them about their behaviors and how it can affect them. I make sure that my words do not hurt their feelings and make them feel that I am the person that they can talk to.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

The most challenging is planning effective teaching strategies everyday. It is because I should consider the learning differences of the students and I should make the subject enjoyable. I should come up with teaching strategies that are enjoyable and relevant to the topic. Students might be bored if the teaching strategies are always the same. The task that I enjoy the most is the teaching itself. This is where I teach some knowledge and got to know the different ideas of my students. This is the part where I also learn from them. I realized that there are several factors that influenced the students' understanding about a particular topic. In addition, I also enjoy when we are given a task for a school event, and I did a very successful job. Having a successful event is a reward for all staff in the school because if one fails, the outcome of the event will not be good.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

My past colleagues describe me as a person that does the task on time. I passed it on time because I know that my principal will check on it before submitting the final output. They describe me as hardworking because I do not always say no if a task is given to me. Some describe me as quiet because I am very silent when I work and will stay in one place until I finish my work. My work will have some minimal revision at first but when I work on it again, I always take note of the mistakes that I had before. I make sure that I learn from those mistakes. I am always in the classroom working on the documents needed for that week or month. They will always say that I am quiet, but I got my work done exactly before the deadline.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

The most personal accomplishment that I am most proud of is receiving random messages from my former students. Sometimes, I do wonder if I did great as a teacher back then. Those messages made me realize that I somehow did a great job as their teacher for that short period of time. I made an impact from their learnings, not just in my subject but also in life. Even though it was a year ago, some of them still update me on how they are. They will message me that they do well in school and still aim for the best. I realized that I have become a mother, sister and teacher for them, which is what I really want to. Those messages made me realize that in that short period of time, I did well in my teaching career. The students can remember you if you have a great impact on them.
