

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

My ideal job would probably involve working in an atmosphere that upholds my moral principles. I want it to satisfy me, provide opportunities for me to learn, and, most importantly, bring me joy. Growing up, my dream job was to work in the medical field, saving people's lives and assisting those in need. However, I discovered that I have hemophobia, which is a fear of blood, but if anything is possible, I think my dream job would still be in the medical field or in a job position where I could help people. Providing assistance brings me joy because I can lighten the load of other people, allowing them to have more time for their tasks as well as time for themselves. I also love to help other people, even in small ways within my capacity to help, and I feel a sense of fulfillment that I can uphold my principle of kindness.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

We cannot avoid being in stressful situations during college, especially in our senior year. This is the stage at which the thesis must be completed. One of the most stressful aspects of completing our thesis is having group members uninterested in doing their assigned tasks and a group leader who pays little attention to our paper's details. My groupmate, who is also a close friend of mine, and I were really stressed about finishing our thesis because we wanted to submit it on time. To resolve the issue, we suggested to our leader that we hold a group meeting to discuss the completion of our thesis and assign tasks to each member with their own deadline. After that, we managed to submit our thesis on time and learned that we all have different interests in life and that any stressful situation, especially if it involves other people, can be talked out and resolved.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

I find it difficult to interact with new clients every day during my internship because I am not very good at starting conversations or communicating. There have also been times when we had to deal with grumpy, ungrateful, and irritated clients, which has put our patience and understanding to the test. I overcame those challenges to assist those clients who come to our office seeking assistance with their needs. On the other hand, what I enjoy the most about my internship is hearing "thank you" from my clients and other positive comments from them or my supervisors. Those words brighten our days and give us motivation to go to work each day since, despite our own struggles, we can still be of assistance to others. The sense of fulfillment we feel after our daily shift motivates us to help more people, particularly those who are considered lower class in this society.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

I think my past colleagues or managers would describe my work ethic as self-disciplined, dedicated, and honest. I do believe that those characteristics helped me through my internship and college without any problems because I respect and value everyone that surrounds me. I easily learn things that are being taught to me because I dedicate my focus and time to becoming familiar with them so that whenever my colleagues/managers ask me, I already know what to say or how to help them. Furthermore, in doing every task that is assigned to me, I do everything seriously and with integrity because I believe that it is where I can build a strong relationship with them, as I am also giving value to their trust. My former colleagues and managers would always be delighted to have me and be able to assist them because of the trust I had established with them through my characteristics.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

As a fresh graduate, the accomplishment that I am most proud of is finishing college with an honor. Throughout the journey, there were numerous obstacles, unforeseen events, and failures that caused me to question my abilities, my course, and myself. Life can be difficult and rollercoaster at times; there have been nights filled with silent cries, the loss of people, and going to school unmotivated, but I am proud of myself for getting through it all. I believe that the experiences I had along the way strengthened my faith in God and helped me believe in myself even more. It strengthened my determination to succeed in life with God and to learn to forgive even when those people did not ask for it, as well as to forgive myself for being so harsh. The medal and degree I received serve as symbols of my courage and perseverance, which I am most proud of.
