

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Being a pediatrician would be my ideal career. Perhaps because I adore children. I want to understand their needs and behavioral problems and have the chance to care for them. I find it funny how children respond, particularly when they make their own discoveries.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

Indeed, the most distressing issue I encountered at my previous job was when I received bills that were missing a signature, which was essential to one of my responsibilities. Bills must contain a full signature in order for us to determine whether the customer actually received the products. We remind all the delivery drivers and assistants every day that they must verify the invoices' signatures. By requesting assistance from the drivers' superiors, I was able to get around it. We then decided that in order for her to follow up with them, I would have to email her a report each day before my shift finished.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

In my prior role, the most difficult duty I encountered was the monthly reconciliation of 19 provisioning accounts. Perhaps because I was requested to complete this assignment right away by my client and lacked the necessary training, I was able to learn and figure it out on my own, which is beneficial for me. I found posting invoices to be simple and easy, so I enjoyed it.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

I think my former supervisors or coworkers would characterize me as accountable. Because I take responsibility for my mistakes and offer an instant apology. I believe when you take responsibility for your mistakes and offer an instant apology, it shows that you prioritize honesty and integrity in your work. By quickly acknowledging when something isn't right, we are not only showing self-awareness but also building trust with the people around us.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

I am quite pleased with the way I handle my finances while raising a family, building our own home, taking them on trips, and purchasing the items we desire while also saving a little money. These, in my opinion, are my greatest achievements when my children are content and healthy. For me, financial success isn't just about numbers or material things, but about creating a nurturing, stable environment for my family.
