

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Since I am plagued with stories in my mind, it would be to become a novelist or a writer. It has been my ultimate dream since God knows when. Even if my books in the future won't be tagged as best-sellers, or they could stay in Wattpad forever for all I care because it's more on the feeling and joy of writing whatever my heart desires, the thought that I wrote that. In conclusion, it is because writing, especially creating stories, gives me sheer bliss, nothing more, nothing less.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it, and how did you overcome it?

In my previous job, I also acted as a liaison for our office. One day, I sent a letter containing crucial information to the wrong address; worse, it was sent to our opposing party in a case, and it was only the next day that I realized the mistake I had committed. When I arrived at the courier's office, they informed me that the letter was already out for delivery when they called their provincial branch. I was devastated, not for myself but for my boss' dignity and credibility as a lawyer. So, I called the branch manager and made him understand the cruciality of the situation whilst also maintaining humility since this is a mistake that I caused. Fortunately, in the end, we were able to get the letter back, which saved my boss' name and gave me an incredible lesson in handling client-related information.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most, and why?

The specific task that I found most daunting is to physically write every key information from every single notarized document in our office per year because it requires time and consistency in maintaining a readable penmanship, but in the end, I was able to get through with it and was happy with the outcome. Now, the task I enjoyed the most was writing emails and letters on behalf of our clients. They tell me the context and the feeling they wanted to convey, and I write it down; it made me relate to the anime Violet Evergarden; it felt good.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

I believe they would describe it on a positive note since I adhered to all the rules and regulations that they set and required in the workplace. I am confident to say that I did not breach any job contract in my previous jobs.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

In my graduate school before, each group was tasked with writing a research paper tackling the affected farmers under the Agrarian Reform, and our completed research paper garnered attention from our professors and was chosen to be published in our school's publishing office; that was to be put in libraries in our school.
