

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

- If anything were possible, my dream job would be in an HR setting. I think I could be myself more when I am working with people physically. In addition, we have been taught to manage people, so I think that is a skill I can easily learn. Also, being able to play video games while earning money is one of my dreams. Imagine being able to play your favorite video games while earning tons of money; that is a life full of leisure. Even though it is not possible right now, I think having a goal is very crucial in our lives. You have a direction for what to look forward to, and also you have a purpose for why you are working hard. Being able to achieve all that requires hard work and perseverance. Facing all challenges that may come your way will be beneficial for your growth as a person.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

- The most stressful situation that I have experienced yet is our thesis defense. The deadlines are all piling up, together with the exams, and my mind is in shambles. My groupmates didn't contribute much to our work, which led to loads of work piling up, and the deadline is fast approaching. In addition, we have an upcoming mock board exam, which is the basis for whether we can proceed to our OJT or not. It has been a hellish week for us; our classmates are breaking down, and some of us don't even have an ounce of energy to show up at school anymore. Nonetheless, I have overcome it by prioritizing what needs to be done first and showing up. Show up even if it is hard; show up even if it is uncomfortable; facing your challenges is one way of strengthening you. Being consistent in what you do can help you succeed in life.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

- The most challenging part is the part where you are tasked with a project that you have no idea about, the instructions are not clear, and there is little time before the deadline. Many of our supervisors during our internship period give vague instructions, which we have to figure out on our own. For some, they may look at it on the negative side, considering that the ratings of your supervisors will reflect your grades, but for me, I look at it as a learning opportunity. Being tasked with making a project on your own will test your capabilities and skills, which are beneficial to your future career path. On the other hand, the tasks that I enjoyed the most are data entry tasks; I find data entry tasks comfortable. Data entry is a crucial skill that you must learn in today's era because companies are now practicing paperless systems, which has led to various technologies and software being integrated into the workforce. Overall, my experiences have been beneficial to me, ingraining new skills and a different view about the corporate world.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

- My past colleagues would describe me as easygoing because I tend to be carefree and also joyous in the way I do things. I am also showing them that I am not bothered by the tasks that are being passed on to me, and I earnestly accept them. On the other hand, my managers would describe me as a serious person. I am always cautious in my actions when I am around important people in the company, which gives them the impression that I am always serious. In addition, I take my tasks seriously, and I do my very best to meet deadlines and their expectations. It is a bare minimum for a person in a workplace to do their best to meet deadlines and expectations. Meeting deadlines and expectations also requires skills. I do things efficiently, using various tools to complete a task with ease and on time always.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

- The accomplishment that I am most proud of is graduating with Latin Honors and being able to survive through all that. I have now reaped the fruits of my labor in going to school for 16 years, in which I have faced countless challenges growing up. Also, I am very grateful to all the people that have supported me throughout my academic journey. My family, my mom and dad, I am proud of them for sending me to school without me worrying about my basic needs. I am also proud of them for honing me to be what I am today. Even though I am yet to become successful, the values that have been ingrained in me are priceless and are a treasure that I will be holding onto.

Small or big accomplishments are worth celebrating. It is a reminder to us that we are growing and are capable of achieving something in life if we truly work for it.
