

1. If anything were possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

Growing up, I was fascinated by planes and the military. I thought it would be realistically achievable for me to become a pilot. But I ignored that dream after learning how much it would cost to become one.

If I were given the chance and if anything were possible, I would be in the Air Force, specifically as an aviator. When I see an aircraft in person or on social media, it always sparks something inside of me. I aspire to be an aviator not only to travel the world but also to serve others. That is why I believe being in the Air Force combines the fulfillment of operating a mechanized machine that has wings and the sole duty to serve the people and protect the country.

I believe that the job is not only a dream but also a possibility that I can achieve in the future. With the necessary knowledge and skills, as well as determination and resilience, I believe it is possible to achieve my life's purpose.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if a fresh graduate)? What was it, and how did you overcome it?

It is common in the workforce industry that stressful situations arise. As a student assistant at my university, I faced challenges that required me to compromise procedures. A former governor of the province visited the office unexpectedly, claiming to have a meeting with the vice chancellor.

The governor has a reputation for being impulsive and not giving people advance notice to set up meetings on his behalf. Unfortunately, during that day, I was the only personnel available, as my supervisors were on leave. Additionally, I had prior tasks that were urgent and due that day. To make the situation worse, the vice chancellor was in a meeting at a different office.

I had to immediately set aside the tasks and accommodate the governor; I made sure that he was comfortable enough to stay and wait as I alerted our vice chancellor of his sudden appearance. I went back to the tasks when I was assured that the situation would not rise to any concern. I overcame the situation by being calm and rational in front of important people.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging, and why? What task did you enjoy most, and why?

Being an intern at a prominent real estate company in Bacolod has its pros and cons. I was assigned to the events and marketing team and was given different tasks throughout my journey. I am comfortable juggling multiple tasks at once, but it depends on the kind of tasks that I am handling.

The most difficult task that I've been assigned is to create a high-quality video reel for posting on the main social media page. I had a difficult time conceptualizing content and getting it approved by the manager. The duration of creating a single reel took weeks in order for it to be scheduled and posted. However, a task that I gladly accepted is to outsource suppliers or businesses to become sponsors at the event or activity by the company.

It gave me the fulfillment of attracting prospects and ensuring that they will accept the offer and become a partnership in the long term. My internship journey was an enjoyable process. Despite the setbacks, I would be willing to accept and overcome the challenges.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

I was exposed to different fields before graduating and had been with colleagues and managers with different personalities. I have programmed myself to be decent in their perspective, trying to maintain within the range of being suitable and great.

In terms of my work ethic, they described me as obedient in the way I operate and execute tasks. I always read the instructions twice or more and try my best to execute the task, minimizing errors. At times, they would say that I tend to get along well with others. It is because I respect and understand them. Generally, they have described me as a future professional that will have a promising career.

Being described by previous colleagues and managers, I came to realize that this is just who I am as a person. I may not be the best, but I am trying. I have always wanted to conquer challenges and overcome my fears. But most importantly, I want to achieve it with the people I trust. It is not hard to be a good person. As I like to say, "We don't need to be in the shoes of others; it is kind enough to help them tie their own."

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

I had time to think back on my life after graduating from college. There were significant times, but also harsh ones. Looking back, I started to be proud of myself when I decided to study alone and depart from my family.

Living alone as a kid was challenging, while also trying to balance education. I went through hunger and pain, but that was the experience I thought I needed to grow. When I started college here finally with my family, I was able to achieve accomplishments that I first thought were not possible. The first accomplishment of which I am proud is my recent graduation with honors. Seeing how proud my parents are, I felt relieved that I did not waste my years studying. The next is a personal accomplishment: getting by each day while carrying the burden of my parents' pain. I hope that their recovery will be another addition to my accomplishments.

After all that I've been through, I am proud to say that my experiences in different circumstances have shaped who I am now, and my goal is to become the best individual that I can be. To my former self, you have accomplished more than you could have imagined, and for my future, I wish you survival and strength.
