

1. If anything was possible, what would your dream job be, and why?

If anything was possible, I would pursue becoming a professional in the medical field, like being a doctor or a nurse. When I was a child, I perceived doctors and nurses as living heroes. I am fascinated by the surgical processes that these professionals do during operations just to save people's lives. Moreover, I have heard bad impressions about some of the doctors and nurses in the public hospital in our city. People often say that these professionals only work because of money, and they choose who they want to save. Hence, I wanted to break this mindset. I want to become a medical professional who has pure intentions, and that is to serve my purpose as a healthcare agent who is willing to help others with my skills and expertise. I want to become a doctor or a nurse who's willing to provide aid to those who need it without asking for any conditions.

2. Have you ever experienced a stressful situation in your past workplace (college if fresh graduate), what was it and how did you overcome it?

Yes, I have experienced a stressful situation during college. On our fourth year, I had my internship at a public high school in our city. At first, everything was going great, I was enjoying every teaching session that I did, not until I was tasked to teach a particular section in Grade 7. I was not informed that this section had five (5) students who were hearing-impaired, and I was really stressed out because I didn't know how to communicate with them. During that time, I felt like I failed as a student-teacher as I saw that they were uninterested in the class. I got anxious, and it eventually affected my whole performance that day. However, I wanted to prove to myself that I am worthy to be called "PNUan", so to overcome this stressful situation, I've gone extra mile. I researched and learned some of the basic sign language overnight so that I could communicate with my students well. My efforts certainly did not betray me because the next day, I was able to strike up a conversation with those students, I was able to engage them in my class, and I finally saw my students' smiles during our discussion.

3. In your previous position, what task did you find most challenging and why? What task did you enjoy most and why?

The task that I think was the most challenging during my internship was the checking of papers and encoding the students' grades on the spreadsheet. Checking papers after examination was really exhausting since I handled six sections with 30 as the minimum number of students. I must check more than 150 papers, and then I had to facilitate the process of determining the frequency of errors. After that, I needed to record each paper and encode it on the spreadsheet which was really tiring especially when I had to bring the work home to get the work done immediately. On the other hand, the task that I enjoyed the most was teaching the students. I am actually a Social Science student-intern, and I do really love teaching my students about world history. I love to communicate and interact with them, especially when the students are actively engaging during the teaching and learning process. I really love hearing their viewpoints and arguments especially when we relate history to the contemporary challenges that we are facing in the 21st century. Their different outlooks and opinions tell me that they have learned something from my class, and that they are actually socially aware of the current surfacing issues.

4. How would your past colleagues or managers describe your work ethic?

If we are going to base it on my internship period, I think that my cooperating teachers think that my work ethic is great. During my internship, I made sure to put my best foot forward. I was compliant with the orders of my cooperating teacher, and I was doing my work diligently to minimize errors. Also, I was praised by one of the faculties for doing most of the work that was supposed to be the task of the teacher. I was commended by the faculty for my teaching demonstration on which I was nominated to represent our class for the demonstration competition. I was also praised for being courteous for always using "po" and "opo" in conversations. Likewise, I think my colleagues also think that I have great work ethics since I didn't have any problem with any of them before. Most of my co-interns became my close friends during and after the internship.

5. What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

I think that the personal accomplishments that I am most proud of is first, getting my bachelor's degree in education with great marks. Although it was not really my dream to become a teacher, I still did my very best in my chosen field, and I do believe that I deserved the recognition because I worked so hard for it. The next personal achievement may sound petty, but I am proud of achieving the Mythical Honor rank in Mobile Legends just this year. I've been a player for a long time, and this is the highest rank that I've obtained so far. The last personal accomplishment that I am proud of is finally completing and successfully passing my training at PathCutter PH, landing in my first ever job. My efforts have paid off, and having this job means that I can now sustain my needs and desires. Also, I can now give back to my parents by means of financial support.
